

Comparing Economy Directions and DBQ

Step 1: On your paper or online with the technology you are using, answer the identification questions for NAFTA using the CRCT Prep-book.

Step 2: Use the documents below to create and design a page that will show the comparison between and Inuit citizen of Canada and a typical Canadian citizen's economies, their standard of living, and their literacy rates.

Document A: Description: The Inuit Ice Fishing

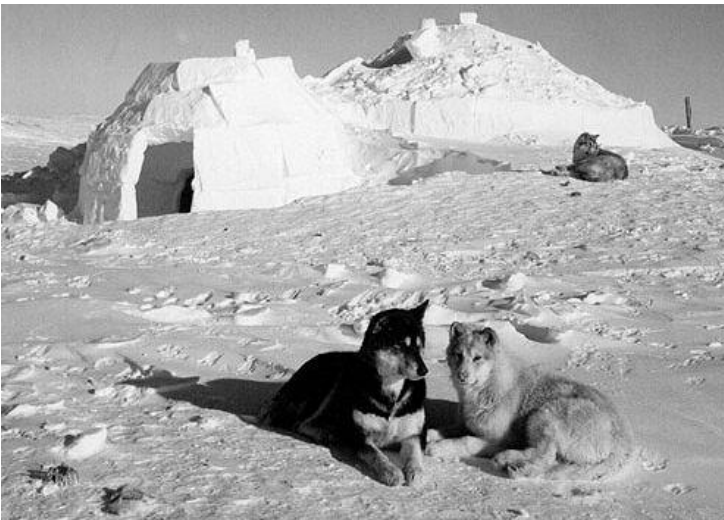

Document B:

Many Inuit communities learn their trades from their parents. Men have specialized jobs and hunt while women take care of the homes and the family.

Also, refer to Document D to see how many Inuit stores accept furs as a form of currency because they do not use an official currency. They barter their goods for whatever they need.

Document C: Inuit Home

Document D: Inuit Marketplace

Document E:

Description- Downtown Montreal, a city in Canada. Note all of the different types of businesses and buildings.

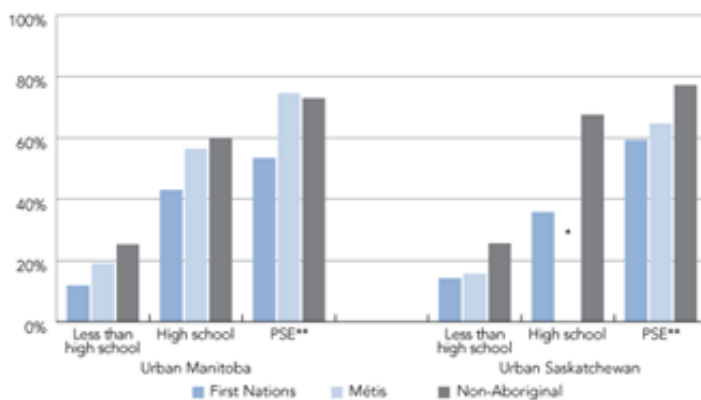

Document F

Description: Neighborhood in Canada

Document G

Description: Literacy Rates of first nations (Inuit), Metis (mixed Inuit and not Inuit), and non-Aboriginal (not Inuit) in Saskatchewan and Manitoba

Document H

In Canada, the central government of Canada has some mandates for businesses. The central government and local governments of Canada has people fill out an application if they want to start their own business, and businesses need to follow the law. If a business does something against the law, like selling cigarettes to minors, then the business can be shut down.

However, starting a business is very easy. People can choose to sell any type of good that they want to from food businesses to technology to toys. In fact, the people have more freedom within their businesses than the government does. The government doesn't control the businesses or business leaders by telling them when, where, what, and how much they can create.
